

Reducing Red Tape and frustration for British Columbians

For 4 years in a row, B.C. has received an "A" in red tape reduction for small business. The time has come to take that momentum and apply it to services for citizens.

Reducing Red Tape for British Columbians means making improvements to deliver services that are:

 Faster

 Easier to access

 Simpler to use

The good news is that we've already seen some great improvements. For example:

- ✓ British Columbians can now get information and assistance to register to be an organ donor at any of the 62 Service BC locations. Last year's pilot program shows the simplified system could boost the number of organ donations up to four times the amount registered under the previous system.
- ✓ You can now buy local beer and wine at farmers markets and shop at BC Liquor Stores on Sunday.
- ✓ You can apply online for special occasion licences to host parties or outdoor weddings instead of filling out paperwork at BC Liquor Stores, police stations and municipal halls.
- ✓ It's easier for citizens to access their personal income assistance and disability assistance information through MySelfServe, an online tool.
- ✓ Since the beginning of Regulatory Reform in 2001, the B.C. Government has already reduced the number of regulatory requirements and red tape by 43%.
