

British Columbia's Aboriginal Small Business Resources

ABORIGINAL ENTREPRENEURSHIP: IT'S ROOTED IN HISTORY

Aboriginal peoples have a long history of entrepreneurship in British Columbia. From thriving fisheries to international trade economies, the entrepreneurial spirit has existed for centuries.

In recent history, Aboriginal owned and operated businesses are growing and succeeding in all sectors of the economy, from technology and agrifoods to forestry and Aboriginal cultural tourism.

This handout provides information on small business start-up and growth support services tailored to Aboriginal entrepreneurs and small business owner needs. The list of services is not exhaustive, but it identifies resources to support all aspects of business start-up and growth.

"As an Aboriginal business owner starting a business on reserve, I wasn't able to access funding or loans from conventional banks. All Nations Trust and the Business Development Bank of Canada helped me with financing.

The good news is that support and opportunities for Aboriginal entrepreneurs and small businesses are changing in a positive way. I want Aboriginal youth to know that entrepreneurship is an option for them - you don't have to work for someone else."

~Sharon Bond-Hogg, Owner of Kekuli Café, Westbank and Merritt
