What's the Story?

Join us for the first of our quarterly B.C. Ideas Exchange Story Series featuring two communities who have turned great taste into economic opportunity! Hear the inside stories and participate in a talk-show-style Q&A among your economic development colleagues.

This new series brings our online B.C. Ideas Exchange story library to life and showcases community-led economic development success stories from throughout the province. Learn from communities who have tried economic development a little differently and join a peer-to-peer network of innovative economic development practitioners.

SHARING B.C. SUCCESS

Hear the story of how Fields Forward is creating jobs and wealth, diverting waste, and uniting the community through a new food and agriculture initiative in the Creston Valley. One of their first projects is the Mobile Fruit & Vegetable Press – a social enterprise that brings a mobile juice press to farms.

What do you get when you have four breweries opening on the same street in a supposedly sleepy suburb? For the city of Port Moody, you get a great economic opportunity. "Brewers Row" has turned the city into a destination for gourmands and beer lovers who come to taste the beer and stay to eat in restaurants and visit the cultural spots. With a little creativity and a lot of "yes" attitude, the results are paying off.
