

Ministry of Forests Research Program

The Ministry of Forests is the Province of British Columbia's agency responsible for natural resource management services that supports resilient forests, landscapes, watersheds, fish and wildlife for the benefit of all British Columbians. The Research Program produces timely and high-quality research for the sustainable management of British Columbia's natural resources. Research scientists work throughout the province to support decision-making, policy development and resource management best practices.

AREAS OF EXPERTISE

ECOSYSTEM STEWARDSHIP

The Research Program supports the province's stewardship of natural ecosystems with applied and effective research. Research on ecosystem management helps maintain healthy and resilient forests.

WATER

The Research Program develops tools to monitor and protect lakes, rivers and streams. This work also informs response plans to landslides, erosion and floods.

ECOSYSTEM HEALTH AND DISTURBANCE

The Research Program helps to better understand the impact of human activities and natural disturbances such as pests and wildfires on forest health.

TIMBER

The Research Program improves understanding of the impact of climate change on timber supply to help sustain vibrant and diverse forests.

SPECIES AND HABITATS

The Research Program conducts research on fish population and wildlife habitat for better management and conservation of biodiversity.

BIOECONOMY

The Research Program supports the development of British Columbia's innovative green economy with fibre and market analysis.

The Research Program has a long history of providing high-quality research to inform forestry policies and practices.
