Dear NAME:

I am reaching out to provide new information about the Ministry of Children and Family Development's (MCFD) emergency measures for youth and young adults during the COVID-19 pandemic. Minister Mitzi Dean outlines some of these changes in her video.

Youth in care and young adults who have transitioned to adulthood deserve to feel supported and safe, especially as the challenges of the pandemic remain. That is why the ministry is extending the emergency housing measures for another year, until March 31, 2022.

This means that young adults who would have otherwise transitioned into adulthood at age 19 will be able to stay in their current living arrangements and continue to receive the supports they count on. The eligibility for these emergency housing supports remains the same as previous extensions. Ministry and Delegated Aboriginal Agency (DAA) workers will work with youth to transition them where appropriate, inclusive of those transitioning to Community Living BC.

In addition to the extension of the emergency housing measure, there is continued support and flexibility available through the Agreements with Young Adults \(AYA\) program, available until September 30, 2021. Some of the changes to AYA over the last year include easier access to life skills and rehabilitative or mental health programs, fewer weekly participation hourly requirements, inclusion of a new cultural learning program, and the ability to participate in the AYA program for online learning.

Concurrent access of AYA and emergency housing measures

For young adults who are currently eligible for the AYA program, the ministry is encouraging them to access the emergency housing measure and the AYA program at the same time. Allowing young adults to access these two supports concurrently will help more young adults participate in life skills, mental health and rehabilitative programs, as well as post-secondary programs, while remaining in their current placement and will help them build a stronger foundation as they transition to adulthood.

Exceptions for AYA program requirements

The needs-based assessment of the AYA program continues; however, ministry workers can request exceptions to program criteria in circumstances where AYA-eligible young adults require additional flexibility to be successful on their program, such as when not meeting minimum hourly requirements. This allows the AYA program to meet young adults where they are and be responsive to their needs during this unprecedented time. If a young adult requires additional support and flexibility to be successful in AYA, they should reach out to their ministry or DAA worker.

Please share this news with youth and young adults you know and work with. In the next few days, we will post additional materials to our public Web site that you can use to share within your organization and social media platforms.

For any additional questions or comments, please reach out to Catherine Talbott, Executive Director, Strategic Initiatives, at Catherine.Talbott@gov.bc.ca.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Allison Bond
Deputy Minister for Children and Family Development
