Robert Alexander Collins is not licensed to provide rental property management services in British Columbia

The Office of the Superintendent of Real Estate is warning consumers that Robert Alexander Collins of Nanaimo, British Columbia, is not licensed to provide rental property management services under the Real Estate Services Act (Act).

Consumers that use the services of an unlicensed rental property management company or manager are not protected by the Act, which holds rental property management companies and managers to specific standards.

The Real Estate Council of British Columbia website contains a list of rental property management companies and managers that are licensed to do business in British Columbia. This list can be searched online at <http://recbc.amsasp.com/publicsearch/search.asp>.

In British Columbia, a licensed rental property management company or manager carries errors and omissions insurance, manages funds through trust accounts, meets educational and professional standards, and is subject to a licensing and regulatory framework administered by the Council.
