Section 195(3)(b) of the Criminal Code

Interception of private communications, pursuant to the provisions of Part VI of the Criminal Code, is an essential element for the investigation, detection, prevention and prosecution of offences in Canada. Often the police obtain information through the interception of private communications that they could not have received by any other means. New information may also trigger additional investigations. Due to the serious nature of invasions of privacy, there are statutory safeguards to ensure that abuses do not take place. Generally, the interception of private communications must only be done with the authorization of a Justice of the Supreme Court. When the police require an authorization, a designated Crown counsel reviews the application to ensure it complies with the appropriate laws. Designated senior police officers may, in cases of emergencies, directly apply to the court for an authorization. The application is brought before a justice or judge, who will grant the authorization if it is in the best interests of the administration of justice and the application meets other criteria, as set out in Part VI of the Criminal Code. The authorizations are valid for a specific period of time and must be renewed by a Justice if they are required for a longer period of time. In certain circumstances, a police officer may intercept private communications without judicial authorization if the interception is immediately necessary to prevent an offence that would cause serious harm to any person or to property, as set out in Part VI of the Criminal Code.
